The Gaoss-ford's steering gear had become dishabled and although she reversed her propellers full speed astern when the Helene loomed up out of the night she erashed head on into the French bark's starboard quarter, tearing a big hole through which water poured swiftly. Tapt Maisoneuve intucdiately ordered two lifeboats munched, one on each side, but the Helene heeled so quickly to starboard that the port beat rolled down her side, spilling 18 men into the sea. The starboard boat, containing the capitals and 15 men, cut free of the daylf ropes just in time to secape being drugged down by the rapidly sinking ship and later picked up two men who had ching to the overturned port heat. The Ganssford also launched a hoat but the 16 other saliors had gone down.
